INTRODUCTION

Saint Andrew's Parish Church is one of the many historic churches of Charleston, SC. Old St. Andrew's, as the church is commonly called, is the oldest church building south of Virginia still used for regular services. Old St. Andrew's was established in 1706 under the Church of England, built the same year, expanded in 1723, and has been restored many times. It is affiliated with the Diocese of South Carolina, the Anglican Church in North America, and the worldwide Anglican Communion.

This document and the one following it provide easy-to-search listings of entries (births, baptisms, confirmations, marriages, deaths, and burials) from parish registers spanning more than a century. Volume 1 includes entries transcribed from the eighteenth-century colonial parish register, and Volume 2, from the nineteenth-century antebellum register. Until now there was no easy way for someone to search these church records. The St. Andrew's registers had to be accessed either in hard copy or microfiche. These volumes will significantly simplify the search process.

It seems fitting that Volume 1, which covers the period 1697-1785, with the first entries from the seventeenth century in Curacao (transferred in later) and the last from the aftermath of the American Revolution, is being released nearly three hundred years to the month when the second rector of St. Andrew's, Reverend William Guy, began his register. The cover of the original register was inscribed as follows: "The Register Book [kept?] by the Revd Mr Guy for the Use [words missing, of ye?] Psh [Parish] of St. Andrews begun ye [words missing] of January 1718/19 pr. [per] the Revd Wm Guy [words missing] of the sd. [said] Parish." The eighteenth-century parish included both West Ashley and James Island. It was not until 1831 when the chapel of ease on James Island was established as a separate church, St. James, to serve Episcopalians there.

The Church Act of 1706 described in detail the organization and structure of the parish system in South Carolina. Churches were to maintain register books under the care of people also called registers. These books became the official, public repositories of vital statistics until after the Civil War, when governmental entities assumed this role. Colonial residents were obligated to have important events recorded in the parish register or face fines, "negroes, mollatoes, and Indian slaves excepted." Only clergy, and not public magistrates, could perform marriages. Some register entries included the notation "3 times published" to indicate that an upcoming marriage had been publicly announced beforehand. The paucity of names of enslaved Africans or Native Americans is somewhat explained by the Church Act not mandating these entries. Yet the few names of enslaved people that did make it into the register also attest to the ineffective ministry to these people during the colonial era, which has been widely noted.

The original colonial register has long been lost but was copied and edited in its entirety by Mabel L. Webber of the South Carolina Historical Society more than a century ago. Webber published "Register of St. Andrews Parish, Berkeley County, South Carolina, 1719-1774" in eleven consecutive quarterly issues of the South Carolina Historical and Genealogical Magazine from October 1911 to April 1914. Despite the date range in Webber's title, the register includes entries before 1719 and after 1774. Webber's work also includes entries from 1876 to 1904 that were added not long before she transcribed the original colonial register; these are included in Volumes 2 and 3 of this series covering the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Entries in this document are taken from Webber's transcription; the notation "transcriber" in line-item entries refers to Mabel Webber. Source entries are indicated by the following abbreviations: register type/month of the journal where the entry can be found/page number in that article. For example, CR/Oct1911/186 means that this entry is taken from the colonial register, the October 1911 issue of the SCHGM, page 186.

Entries are listed alphabetically by last name, with most people of color (mostly enslaved, but a few free) listed by first name, since they didn't have a surname. The colonial register is arranged by event. That is, births are grouped together in sections, as are baptisms (christenings), marriages, and burials. Deaths are included only towards the end of the register. Confirmations were not administered until the nineteenth century so are absent from the colonial register. It was not uncommon for parents to give a child the same name as a sibling who had died (e.g., one Martha Wells was baptized in 1734 and another Martha Wells in 1740, both with the same parents). Names were often spelled phonetically, which leads to inconsistencies. Modern spellings have been used to reduce confusion and aid in searchability, but phonetically-written names as spelled in the register are noted in the item description. Surnames are listed by their most common variant (e.g., Hayden for Haydon/Heydon, Heyward for Hayward/Haward). First name abbreviations have been spelled out in their entirety. Some incomplete dates were listed in the register (e.g., 17-, 171-, 172-, 173-) and have been reproduced here as such. Estimates followed by a question mark (e.g., 1723?) are provided when a reasonable assumption can be made based on where the listing falls with other dates around it or when a birth or baptismal date might provide a clue. (Most baptisms occurred shortly after birth, given the period's high level of infant mortality.) Some dates and names were not provided; these are marked "unk" for unknown. For example, "1745 unk" means that the year is known but the month and date are not.

Double dates are often found in the colonial register. These were used between January 1 and March 24, with March 25 the beginning of the new year under the Julian or Old Style (OS) calendar, which was used in England and her colonies until 1752. Thus dates between January 1 and March 24 carried two years separated by a slash (e.g., 1709/10). Today's Gregorian or New Style (NS) calendar convention would drop the first year and make 1710 correct in this example. To reduce confusion, double dates have been converted to single dates here. By the 1740s, transcribers often entered only the first year, which can cause further confusion among modern readers. Webber corrected many of these inaccuracies. I did the same when she did not, adding a notation such "year given as 1745 (OS)" when the year should read 1746.

In the beginning of the register, event headers include the name of the officiating minister (e.g., "Christenings per the Rev. Mr. Guy"). Headers gradually become more general (Marriages, Burials) without clergy reference. Whether this change was substantive or merely a reflection of how a different register labeled these sections of the register is unknown. I assume that dissenters are included in the register, although how many, I don't know. Scattered references of a dissenting Baptist, Presbyterian, or Lutheran minister performing a baptism, marriage, or burial are found. This begs the question whether Reverends Guy and Martyn, during their nearly fifty-year combined ministry, performed events not specifically attributed to them. After William Guy's death in December 1750, the register includes notations reading "interred without a minister," indicating that this was an unusual occurrence. Because Reverend Guy's semiannual reports of parish life to the Church of England in London included references to the people he baptized, I have attributed to him (and Charles Martyn) events performed that were not directly attributed to them in register headings. It is possible that these rectors did not perform some of the events I have attributed to them.

The location of where events were held in the colonial register was rarely noted, and these are indicated. It should not be assumed that events were typically held in or at the church, particularly burials. In colonial times, common practice in rural areas like St. Andrew's Parish was to bury the dead on the plantation or farm where they lived, and not at the church graveyard, which was deemed unsafe from foraging animals. Known burials at the parish church are indicated. Burials of children are usually noted in the description as "son or daughter of _____"; burials of adults carry no such description, other than prefixes or suffixes (e.g., Mr., Mrs., Dr., Capt., Jr., Sr.).

This transcription includes 3,209 entries. Marriages are included twice, once under the husband's last name and once under the wife's maiden name or surname from a previous marriage. For the inquisitive among you, the letter of the alphabet with the most entries is B, with 338, followed by H (300), M (290), C (281), and S (258). Nine family names dominate the register, each with more than fifty events (births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, and burials). These are Ladson (134), Rivers (96), Fuller (92), Miles (85), Cattell (81), Elliott/Ellett (76), Drayton (73), Godfrey (69), and Wood (62). Next most prominent are Chapman (47), Rose (46), Bellinger (43), Guy (43), Butler (40), and Holman (40). Forty-four entries relate to people of color, including twenty-nine enslaved (one a native woman) and fifteen free.

Where known, short biographical or editorial notes have been added. Those interested in learning more about the families who settled along the Ashley River in colonial St. Andrew's Parish should consult the works of judge, historian, and plantation owner Henry A. M. Smith that appeared in the South Carolina Historical and Genealogical Magazine a century ago. These are:

Hill	Charles	1715 Jan 13	m	ET	spouse Elizabeth Godfrey; [This is likely the Charles Hill whose children's births were the first entries in the colonial register. This was hardly accidental. Hill was a wealthy Charles Town merchant and Indian trader who supported the overthrow of the proprietors, was elected to the assembly three times, and was chief justice of the province from 1722 to 1724. He owned a number of plantations, including Hillsborough in St. Andrew's Parish. Rev. William Guy wrote that Hill contributed a small silver bell to be hung in the steeple once it was built as part of the 1723 church expansion. Whether the steeple was ever built is unknown.]	CR/Oct1911/180

The slab on Elizabeth's tomb is nearly illegible, but tells of her second husband, Thomas Nairn, "Judge of the Vice Admiralty of this Province, who was barbarously murdered (archaic of murdered) by the Indians, whilst He was Treating with them in the Year 1715." The murder of Thomas Nairn, the colony's Indian agent, and two traders who accompanied him to address outstanding grievances, sparked the Yamassee Indian War (1715-18) that nearly succeeded in driving the English settlers out of South Carolina.]	CR/Oct1911/187
